Australian Communications Advocacy Group welcomes Jobs-ready graduates package Senate Inquiry

Attributable to an ACAG spokesperson:

"The Australian Communications Advocacy group welcomes the Senate inquiry into the Jobs-ready Graduates package announced today. This will provide a valuable opportunity for all affected industries to contribute to this important discussion and be heard.

"Why the government sees the need to continue to rush this legislation without the Senate inquiry having the time they need to hear from all impacted stakeholders just doesn't make sense.

"Humanities and the Arts produce job ready graduates, and these graduates are important to Australia's future, not just in health and public safety, but in technology and manufacturing. We will continue to fight against this unjust and discriminatory policy, not just for the communications industry that we represent, but for the 180,000 graduates from the class of 2020 and the millions of Australians who will be impacted by this unjust policy for decades to come."
